Aug. 14. Westminster. Whereas Joan de Lidiard, sometime the wife of John de Lidiard of Bristol, demised by deed to Edward I and his heirs a rood of land in the suburb of Bristol together with a spring of flowing water and a conduit to the use of the Friars Minors of Bristol in frankalmoin to celebrate yearly two masses for her soul, the souls of her husbands and ancestors and the souls of the king's ancestors, and now the said Friars have prayed the king that, whereas they and their predecessors entered on the premises and have possessed them hitherto supposing that they were sufficiently secured to them, he will be pleased to pardon the trespasses done in the matter and grant that they may retain the said land, spring and conduit; the king, of his reverence to God and that the said masses may be celebrated as intended, has pardoned the said trespasses and grants that they may retain the premises.
