the souls of Margery de Lascy his spouse, Gilbert de Lascy his son, his ancestors and successors, of 40 acres of arable land next to the weir of Marinerston in length from the bank of the river Boyne to the way leading to Clop and in breadth from the weir to the land of Aumar de Nugent, and all the water, sweet and salt, between the town of Mariners and the said 40 acres, for them to build mills on both sides of the weir where most convenient, and a mill stream descending from Clop and Sampson's town, with a stank as large as required, saving only to the grantor and his heirs corn for his table of Douenakarny without multure; but their servants who receive their corn without, shall grind there according to custom and give multure; also that in the tenement of Douenakarny the said Walter and his heirs will not erect or permit to be erected any water-mill, wind-mill or horse-mill. If it shall please the abbot and convent to construct buildings on either side of the weir, they shall not receive any of the grantor’s men or others by whom his fishery or the town may be deteriorated: Witnesses:—Richard de la Cornere, bishop of Meath, Nicholas de Ebroicis, Almarick de Lascy, Richard de Fey, William and Robert his brothers, Simon de Tilleshopp, Paulinus de Cornewall, Philip de Wicheoote, Robert le Wake, William de Porte, clerk, and many others; dated December, 1236:

(ix) Letters patent, dated 18 June, 27 Edward I, of licence for the alienation in mortmain by Robert de Wylgheby, citizen of Dublin, to the abbot and convent of Fourneys of 40 acres of land in Clop.
And in consideration of this that the grants by the said Walter to the monks of Beaubeo, which was confirmed 20 Henry III, and to the abbot and monks of Furness of the lands in the town of Mariners, now called the manor of Marinerston, the grant by Geoffrey de Geynvill to the abbot and monks of Beaubeo of the rent of 40s. and the said quit claim by Christiana, were made long before the statute of mortmain, the king confirms the same to the abbot and convent of Fourneys, into whose hands they have come.
Furthermore, whereas the abbot and convent assert that they are impeached in many ways in their possession of the 40 acres of land in Clop by ministers of the king in Ireland pretending that the same were acquired without licence from William Whitehall, and not from the said Robert de Wylgheby by virtue of the licence aforesaid, he grants that they shall retain the same undisturbed.

By fine of 4 marks.

Licence for Nicholas de la Beche to enfeoff Simon Dassh, chaplain, and Geoffrey le Waunoy of the manor of Bradefeld and 20% of rent in Basteleadsen, held in chief, with the knights’ fees, advowsons and other appurtenances, and for them to re-grant the same in tail male to him and Margery his wife, with remainder to Edmund de la Beche, archdeacon of Berke, for life, to Robert de la Beche in tail male, to John de la Beche in tail male, to William de la Beche in tail male, to Thomas de Langeford in tail male and to the right heirs of the said Nicholas. By p.s.
