his account of the time when he was treasurer of the said king of Ireland, and restored to him his temporalities, lands and goods which had been taken into the hands of Edward II on that account and were then in the present king’s hands, with the issues received since they were taken into the hands of the latter, and by letters of privy seal commanded the said treasurer and barons to give effect to this; and whereas afterwards, on 16 July, in his twelfth year, he granted to the archbishop that he should not be impeached by reason of any offices committed to him by the king’s progenitors or the king, as by his said letters patent appears, on 15 July last, not remembering such pardon, grant and restoration, by writ of great seal he commanded the said treasurer and barons of the exchequer to cause the account to be brought before them and examined and such further steps to be taken as were necessary for execution of the judgment rendered therein. Inasmuch as on view of the said letters before the king and council he has found that these emanated with his knowledge, order and will, in consideration of the premises and of this that the archbishop has granted 60L. as a gift for the expedition of important business, he hereby ratifies the pardon and all other things contained in the writ of privy seal aforesaid.
