William, prior of Llanthony by Gloucester, staying in England, has letters nominating William de Aston and Robert de Boys as his attorneys in Ireland for three years.

William de Newenham received the attorneys.

Whereas on 10 July, 17 Edward III, the king granted to Robert de Salkeld, king's clerk, that he should retain the office of second chamberlain in the exchequer of Dublin for ten years from that day, and whereas afterwards, on a suggestion that that office had been granted to the said Robert at the time when the king was in Brittany, without his knowledge, he granted the same to William de Puriton, clerk, during good behaviour, by pretext of which last grant Robert has been removed from the office as he has heard; taking into consideration the good service done by Robert in the office and at the request of queen Philippa, he has granted that he shall have the office again until the end of the ten years according to the form of the grant previously made and has revoked the grant to William.
