Isabella late the wife of Robert Parvyng has made petition to the king shewing that, whereas the custody of the lands late of Thomas son of Eustace, tenant in chief, which the king for a sum paid at the chamber granted to Robert during the nonage of the heir, came into her hands after his death as executrix of his will, she is now grievously disturbed by the escheator in the county of Hertford, because Nicholas Blake, to whom the manor of Berewyk, co. Hertford, parcel of the said lands, was charged with 10 marks of rent until he had made his profit of a wood pertaining to that manor, made his profit of the wood according to covenants entered into between him and the said Thomas in his lifetime, the escheator asserting that she has committed waste in the said wood contrary to the statute; and the king, taking into consideration the grateful and useful service of Robert in his lifetime and wishing on that account to deal graciously with her, has pardoned her all manner of waste or trespasses committed by her or Nicholas by reason of the premises and whatever pertains to him herein, granting that she shall retain the ward during the nonage according to the form of the grant thereof to Robert.
