should be annulled and entirely set aside as in the rolls of that Parliament more fully appears. For the greater security of the archbishop, and considering the good place which he has held and holds for him, the king holds him blameless in respect of the articles and renews him as deservedly excused.

Whereas the king lately commanded the treasurer and barons of the exchequer to certify into the chancery all debts due from the archbishop to him and they certified that they found nothing due from him except some debts current in demand at the exchequer by reason of chattels of felons and fugitives, fines and other things in right of his church of the Holy Trinity, Canterbury, whereof a plea is pending between the king and the archbishop; the king for like considerations discharges him from all manner of debts current in demand against him at the exchequer, except those contained in the certificate, granting that the executors of his will shall have free administration of his goods for the execution of such will. If it shall happen at his death he be held to the king in any debts emergent after the date of these presents, the executors shall have power to find security for payment thereof without the goods of the archbishop being seized into the king’s hands or the administration of the estate impeded from that cause.
