Whereas John de Warenna, late earl of Surrey, by charter, granted to the king and his heirs all his castles and lands in the counties of Surrey and Sussex, and in Wales and the march of Wales, and afterwards, at the suit of Richard, earl of Arundel, showing that such grant was contrary to the charter whereby the late king granted the same, which the same John had surrendered to him in fee, to the said earl of Surrey, Joan, his wife, and the heirs male of the earl’s body, with remainder to Edmund, then earl of Arundel, and Alesia, his wife, now deceased, and the said Richard and others, as contained in the charter thereof, the king by letters of privy seal remaining on the chancery files commanded Master John de Offord, then dean of Lincoln and the king’s chancellor, that the charter to the earl of Surrey should be damaged and made of none effect and both earls should be restored to the same state as they had before the grant, and that letters hereof under the great seal should be made to the earl of Arundel; the earl has now made petition more instantly that inasmuch as full execution has not yet been duly demanded in respect of such last mentioned grant in his favour, his security will be provided for in this, and the king assenting to his petition quit-claims any right he could claim in the castles and lands by reason of the grant of the same to him by the earl of Surrey to Joan de Bars, countess of Surrey, late the wife of the earl, who has died without heir male begotten of his body, for her life, and has granted that at her death the castles and lands shall remain to the petitioner and his heirs.
