Robert Alwyn has made petition to the king for licence to take to Gascony a ship laden with 100 quarters of wheat bought by him in the bishopric of Durham and shipped for those parts in the port of Hertipol, which has been driven by the violence of the sea to Fobbyege, co. Essex, and has there been arrested by pretext of an ordinance of the king and council that none should take beyond seas corn from Essex and certain other counties, and is detained under arrest to his great damage and loss; and the king, on testimony before him and the council that what is contained in the petition is true and because the petitioner has made oath in the chancery that he will take the corn to Gascony and not elsewhere and bring back about Easter next letters of the constable of Bordeaux testifying to the discharge thereof, has granted him the licence prayed for.

Whereas it appears by a search of the rolls of the exchequer that divers assays of moneys of gold and silver struck in the Tower of London of the time when Henry de Briseleye and John de Cicestre were masters of the same moneys, to wit from 25 October in the twenty-fifth year to 24 November last, both days included, were made at the exchequer, and by those assays it has been found that the moneys of all that time were good and lawful according to the form, force and effect of the indenture made between the king and the masters, as the treasurer and barons of the exchequer have certified into the chancery; the king, as agreed by the covenants in the indenture, acquits the masters of all things touching the moneys for the said time.
