To Mabel late the wife of Roger Torpell. She must well remember that the king gave the custody of the land and heirs of the said Roger de Torpell, with the marriage of the heirs, to R. bishop of Chichester, the chancellor, during the minority of the heirs, whereof, because William, the eldest son and heir, has died, the king commands her, as she loves herself and her goods, not to eloyng Acelota, sister and next heir of the said William, whom the chancellor committed to her ward to nurse, but to deliver her to the messenger of the said bishop bearing these letters with letters of the bishop testifying that he is his messenger.

Mandate to the sheriff of Norhampton, if she do not deliver her to the bishop or his messenger, to distress her to do so by her lands and goods in that county.

Mandate to the mayor and good men of Oxford, as the sheriff of Oxford is too much engaged to attend constantly to the preservation of the peace in that town and the king has thought it fit that Peter Turald should be associated with the sheriff herein, to attend to this with the same sheriff and Peter and one of them when the other cannot attend and use such diligence that the king may commend them.

Appointment, during pleasure, of Robert Passelewe to the custody of the abbey of St. Edward, Shaftesbury, with mandate to the tenants to be intendant to him.

To all masters of ships who have come or are coming to Portsmouth for the crossing of the king's treasure and of the knights about to come to him in Poitou. The king has appointed his clerks William Hardel and John de Colemere to deliver the said ships to the said knights and to make payment of the freight of the said ships, as also of the liveries of the said masters as of the mariners of the said ships; and therefore he commands them to be intendant to the said William and John herein.
