Whereas of late after the death of William de Lanç’ the king granted to William de Valencia, his brother, the debts which the said William de Lanç’ owed to him, and his said brother by his power compelled Peter de Brus, one of the heirs of the said William de Lanç’ to bind himself to pay him 300 marks a year out of his share of the debts; the king, understanding that this bond is grievous and unjust to Peter, as the lands of his purparty do not amount to so much yearly rent, and desiring to amend as well this trespass as other trespasses done in the realm, and to reform the state of the realm by the counsel of his magnates, grants to the said Peter, by the counsel of the nobles of the council, that henceforward he pay 100 marks a year for his purparty until the said debts are paid, notwithstanding the said bond.

Like letters issued for Walter de Lindeseye another of the heirs of the said William to pay 100 marks a year for his purparty, instead of 420 marks which he used to render before.

Simple protection without term for the master and brethren of the hospital of lepers of St. Thomas, Borebrig.

Mandate to the preceptor and treasurer of the New Temple, London, to pay out of the first money which they receive of the issues of the lands of William de Valencia the above mentioned 400l. a year to Joan the wife of the said William as aforesaid.

Mandate to the said preceptor and treasurer to keep safe until further order the money which they shall receive from the sheriffs in whose bailiwicks the lands of the said William de Valencia are, and which the king by ordinance of his magnates ordered to be sent to them under the seals of the said sheriffs and of the bailiffs of the said William.

Mandate to the same repeated in the same words as above under the same date.

Testification that of the gold which William de Gloucestre, king’s goldsmith of London, received in the treasury at Westminster by the hands of Philip Lovel, then treasurer, and Peter de Wintonia, clerk of the wardrobe, he delivered to Aubrey de Fiscannis and the said Peter to the king’s use, on Saturday after St. Mark the Evangelist, 42 Henry III, at Westminster one gold chalice and two gold cups of the weight of 15 marks, 3d., and at SS. Simon and Jude of the following year 190 marks of gold in new money; and grant that these shall be allowed to him in rendering account of the king’s gold received by him.
