from the time that he first received the keeping thereof and so long as he has it; so that he answer for the residue of the issues at the Exchequer.

Safe conduct, until the Purification, for John Comyn, going through England to Canterbury and thence beyond seas and then back home.

Aug. 2. Grant to Roger de Mortuo Mari of 60 marks a year at the Exchequer in the name of a fee, until the king provide for him in land to that yearly value of wards or escheats.

Simple protection for three years for Ralph de la Hele.

Protection, with clause, until Martinmas, for the abbot of Coggeshal, going beyond seas on a message of the king.

Aug. 3. Protection, without clause; until Easter, for Agnes de Vescy.

Safe conduct, for one year, for G. bishop of St. Andrews in Scotland, and his household coming to speak with the king and queen, staying with the king, going to France and returning to his own parts.

Acknowledgment, by the counsel of the magnates of the council, in favour of Walter, bishop of Durham, and his successors of their right to the sequestration (sequestrum) of the churches which the bishop of Carlisle and his church hold assigned to their own uses in the bishopric of Durham; and restitution to him of all the money of such sequestration arising from the two last voidances of the bishopric of Carlisle, which money by the counsel of the said magnates was collected by the sheriff of Northumberland and John de Estlington of the king’s part, and two others of the bishop’s part, and deposited under their four seals in the abbey of Newminster, until it should be discussed to whom the said sequestration belonged; with mandate to the abbot of Newminster to cause the said money to be delivered to the bishop of Durham without delay.

Simple protection, until Easter, for John de Verdun, going to Ireland.

Aug. 5. To Bertrand de Cardilac, seneschal of the Limousin, Quercy and Périgord, Raymond de Bevill and Bertrand his brother, kinsmen of the king, have shown the king that Bernard de Bevill, their father, being of the king’s fealty, lost by the late war with France his castle of Lymolye in the king’s service, at the time that the king’s brother Richard, king of Almain, held the king’s place in those parts, as the said Richard and John de Plessetis, earl of Warwick, and others have testified before the king; and the king, by the peace with France, has recovered the said castle; he therefore commands the said seneschal, if he finds by inquisition that this is so, to make restitution to them of the said castle, on condition that they hand it to the king when he has need of it. But if any ambiguity arises in the said inquisition he is to send the inquisition to the king for him to do justice.
