negligence and connivance of certain bailiffs and citizens of the said city, have made purprestures and trespasses in the suburb and other appurtenances of the said city, to wit, in occupying certain common pastures belonging to the said city; raising houses and mills there; bringing certain pastures into cultivation and appropriating them to themselves; and narrowing the course of the water of the said city, so that where there used to be a course of that water they have built houses and planted trees; obstructing the dyke which for the defence of the city without the wall used of ancient time to be broad and deep and building houses there; making weirs in the said water of their own authority and appropriating the fishery thereof to themselves; raising foreign chambers beyond the said water to the nuisance of those inhabiting the said city; and doing many other trespasses to the very great damage and detriment of the city.
