and felon, and his party in the time of the war between the king and him until the battle stricken between the king and him, and after the death of the earl, then adhered to Simon de Montefort, son of the said earl, the king's enemy, making new war in the realm, and then at Bykerdich, at Christmas, 50 Henry III, put himself at the king's award and ordinance with regard to everything, saving life and limb and prison; the king, because the said Hugh put himself at his award and ordinance, and has since behaved loyally and in peace without misprision against him (sans mesprendre vers nous), willing to do him grace in this behalf, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, receives the said Hugh into his peace, and pardons him his rancour and indignation as well as the trespasses which he did by occasion of the said war so far as is in the king, and so far as belongs to him.

Besides this, with the assent and will of Robert Walerand, to whom the king had given all the lands and tenements late of the said Hugh, with the dower of his mother when it should fall in, he restores and grants to the said Hugh the manors of Wakeringe and Wetherfeld and the aforesaid dower, when it falls in, with the knight's fees which she so holds in dower, and the homage and service of Philip Basset, William de Rehny and the heirs of Robert de Eston, to hold to the said Hugh and his heirs, doing to the king and his heirs the two parts of the services which Hugh owed when he held the said lands entirely, and the services which belong to other lords: so nevertheless that he bear himself well and loyally towards the king and his heirs henceforward; and that he quit claim for himself and his heirs to the aforesaid Robert and his heirs the castle and manor of Stok Curcy and the manors of Radewaye with the hundred and Harham and the homages and services of Simon de Grindham, Philip de Colombers, Walter de Radele, and the heirs of Michael de Spicheswyk for the fees which they hold—all which the king has given to the said Robert for his homage and loyal service, to hold to him and his heirs of the king and his heirs by the third part of the service which Hugh owed to the king for the whole of the lands aforesaid; also that the said Hugh make to the said Robert and his heirs all the security that the king shall will and that the said Robert shall will that neither he nor his heirs hereafter shall be able to challenge any manner of right or claim in the aforesaid castle, manors, hundred and fees for ever.

Furthermore the king pardons to the said Hugh the moiety of all the debts which he or his ancestors owed to the king, and as to the other moiety the king grants terms to him and his heirs to pay 20 marks a year at the Exchequer.

And this his award the king declares in this manner, that if the said Hugh henceforth do anything against the fealty of the king or his heirs overtly, or if he or his heirs put forth any grievance or challenge as to the said castle, manors, hundred and fees which the king has given to the said Robert, all the above lands which the king has restored to the said Hugh shall be forfeit (enceruz) to the king and his heirs together with the fees and the dower when it falls in. And all these lands the king is bound to restore to Robert Walerand or his heirs entirely as the king had given them to him before, without contradiction, and this grace shall be annulled and repeated.

Moreover, at the request of the said Hugh, the king has received into his peace John de Nevile his brother, who was an adherent of the said
