Whereas the prior of Kenillworth, by occasion of the disturbance had in the realm as also by the siege of Kenillworth castle, sustained losses, and nevertheless has done the king so great a courtesy of 2[20] quarters of corn and other things, that the king wishes and ought to defend him specially; the king forbids that, by pretext of any mandate for the making of purveyances to the use of the king or another, any corn or other thing be taken from the prior without his special mandate.

Oct. 23. Westminster. Whereas lately, at the instance of John de Warennæ, earl of Surrey, lord of Stanford, the king granted to the bailiffs and good men of Stanford murage for five years from Whitsunday, 50 Henry III.; the king, in consideration that they were constant in their fidelity in the disturbance had in the realm, grants that after the end of the said term they may take the same murage for another six years with these additions:—on every quarter of madder $\frac{1}{2}d.$, and on every cartload of teasles for the preparation of cloth $1d.$

The king acknowledges that he is bound to William de Marketay in 36s., to Robert de Boyval in 31s., to Adam de Greyngey, and Ingram de Ringisham in 52s., to [Gilbert] Mignot and Michael Mignot in 74s., and to William de Audevill in 19s. 6d. for arrears of their wages for the time they were in the king's service, which money the king will cause to be paid to them at the quinzaine of Easter.
