said William de Monte Caniso and were against the king in the time of the disturbance, and for other reason were suspected by the said William de Valencia, so that the said extent did not reach the right value in great part, procured that they should make the extent again at the king's mandate; so that the said W. de Monte Caniso is unjustly and for a long period prevented from having his lands again according to the award.

As the king wills that no injury be done to either party, he commands them that if they caused the former extent to be made by persons by whom the truth could best be known and who were of no affinity to either party and who were not against the king in the time of the disturbance, they are not to proceed to make another extent by occasion of any mandate of the king afterwards directed to them; but if there was any error in the first extent, as has been shown to the king on behalf of the said William de Valencia, then they are to cause the lands to be extended again by impartial jurors and to send the extent without delay so that it may be before the king on the morrow of Christmas at the latest wherever he may be in England, and to be there themselves so that the king may by their counsel do for both parties without further delay what ought to be done according to the form of the said award.

Mandate to the bailiffs of Norwich, upon information that many who have not yet come into the king's peace meet by night and day and make conventicles and conspiracies as well within the said town as without and also make ambushes so that merchants dare not come to the town as they have been accustomed to do, and those of the town dare not go out of it to attend to their business, and that the said malefactors perpetrate robberies, exactions (tollas), homicides and other trespasses at which the king is much moved and angered, to take with them the whole posse of the said city, if necessary, and arrest such persons and keep them in safe custody until further order.
