the longer liver of them or their heirs or assigns by the services due with warranty against all persons, Jews and Christians. Also the said John de Ardern will not, within the said term, sell, pledge or alien the said land, to prevent them from retaining the land. Moreover the said John de Colecestre and Walter have granted to the said John de Ardern a moiety of all wards as well of the manor of Wylinghale as of the land of Plessingho falling in within the said term. In case war arise within the realm of England within the said term, so that they cannot take the fruits and issues of the said land, the said John de Colecestre and Walter may, after the said three years, keep the said land, until by view of good men they have had satisfaction for any losses incurred thereby. Also it shall be lawful for them to take from the wood and hays belonging to the land of Plessingho reasonable estover, without waste or sale. The said John and Walter shall not exact from the men, free tenants or customary tenants, holding and belonging to the said land of Plessingho, other customs or services than they did to Richard de Rupella or John de Ardern. At the end of the term they shall restore as many acres of arable land, fallow and second ploughed, as they received fallow and second ploughed, of the land of Plessingho at the beginning of the term, together with the grass (vestura) of the meadow of the third year and with the rent of Michaelmas term of that year. At the end of the term the said land shall be returned to the said John de Ardern without contradiction or claim of the said John and Walter unless they have suffered loss by occasion of war, as aforesaid. This covenant was made at Winchester on Saturday the morrow of St. Peter's Chains, 54 Henry III, at which term the said John and Walter began to take all the issues and grass cut of the said land. If anyone renounce the said covenant, he shall pay 20 marks in the name of a penalty to the king. Both parties have sworn to observe these things, and have set their seals to the present writing in the form of a chirograph.
