of [the queen] that no contention may arise between them hereafter, he, with the assent and will of Edward and Edmund, his sons, has assigned to her in dower for the said third part of his lands in Ireland, Gascony and elsewhere falling to her, beyond the above mentioned 1,000l. yearly of land, 3,000l. yearly of land, to wit, 1,000l. yearly in England and 2,000l. yearly in Gascony, although a third part of all the king's lands do not . . . for the said 1,000l. yearly of land in England, to wit:—

the town of [Haveringes with the park,
the manor of Haulegh, with the park,
the manor and town of Gulforde, with the mill and park,
the [castle] of Porcestre, with the forest,
the manor of Aulton with the hundred and other appurtenances, the castle and manor of Merleberg, with the hundred and the forest of Savernak and other appurtenances, the castle and manor of Lutgareshale, with the broils and other appurtenances, the manor and town of Gillingeham, with the hundred, forest and other appurtenances, Sumertone, with the hundred and other appurtenances,
Brikestok, with the park and other appurtenances, Norton and Brencgrave, and Flekeham (sic) with the park,

and all other benefices belonging to the same.

And if the above castles and lands are not worth by reasonable extent 1,000l. yearly, the king grants that what is lacking shall be supplied to her in other lands in England; and if they exceed that sum, the surplus shall remain to the said Edward or other heirs of the king.

As regards the remaining 2,000l. yearly of land in Gascony, the king, with the assent of the said Edward and Edmund, has assigned to her the following castles, towns, and boroughs, to wit, the towns of St. Macaire, Langon, Benauge and Bourg sur Mer, with the other lands of the king in L'Entre deux Mers (inter duo Maria), with the town of St. Emilion, and if these are not worth 2,000l. yearly, the residue shall be made up to her out of the issues of the custom of the city of Bordeaux (Burdel'), on condition that when the city of Saintes and the lands of the bishopric of Saintes come to the king or his heirs, as is contained in the form of the peace entered into between the king of France and him, the said city and all the lands . . . belonging to the said bishopric shall remain to the queen in dower together with the said castles, towns and boroughs in Gascony, for their right value, and such value shall be deducted in the said custom of Bordeaux (Burdgal'); and if such value exceed the amount receivable by her in the custom of Bordeaux, the surplus shall be deducted from the lands assigned to her in Gascony.

For greater security the king, Edward [his son] and the archbishop of Tarentaise in the name of Edmund the king's son, have set their seals to this charter.

Witnesses: Peter de Sa[bandia, John Maujssell, treasurer of York, Robert Walerand, Ebulo de Montibus, Matthias Besilles, Peter de Chaumpvent, Imbert de Munffrant, Peter de Neyvill, Adam de Greynvill, Peter de Percy, William de Chaumpvent, Henry de Gandavo, Peter de Wyntonia, and others. [Decayed in parts.]

[Note in the margin, Carta de assignacione dotis regine, et duplicatur.]