Commission to Richard Kays, serjeant at arms, to deliver certain goods and merchandise to Angelo Ceba, Antony Bocas and Simon Negre, merchants of Genoa dwelling in London. On their complaint that a ship laden with wood and other merchandise of theirs, on which they paid the customs, subsidies and other moneys due to the king in the port of Southampton, when coming to London was chased by the king's enemies so that for fear of them it was driven ashore and the goods and merchandise were taken within a lordship of the earl of Arundel in the county of Sussex for safe-keeping but certain of the council of the earl alleged that they pertained to the earl as wreck of sea and did not permit them to be delivered, the king appointed Robert Saperton, serjeant at arms, to enquire whether they were wreck of sea and if not to deliver them to the said merchants, but although it was found that they were not wreck of sea the officers and ministers of the earl alleged that a parcel pertained to the earl on account of the safe-keeping by his tenants, and did not permit delivery to be made, and William Stanndon, Robert Chichele and Thomas Maynold, citizens and grocers of London, and Thomas Austyn, citizen and mercer of London, have personally made mainprise, each in 200l., before the king in Chancery, for the said Angelo, Antony and Simon that the latter before Christmas will be prepared to stand to right against the said earl in case after his return from Wales he shall wish to put forward any claim to the goods and merchandise.
