Winchester.

Whereas the abbey of St. John, Colchester, of the patronage of the king’s progenitors and the king, is so impoverished by grave oppressions and pleas in the king’s courts and elsewhere by maintenance of certain enemies of the abbot and convent and their possessions are so wasted that they cannot be relieved without the king’s aid or divine services, alms and other works of piety maintained, the king has taken the abbey into his hand during pleasure and committed the keeping of it and all its manors, lands, rents, possessions and goods to Henry, bishop of Winchester, the chancellor, and Richard, bishop of London, so that the issues beyond the necessary maintenance of the abbot and convent and their servants shall be applied to the relief of the abbey and has granted protection.
