and insolences in choir and church or about divine offices. Vicars and other ministers having perpetual benefices should not be compelled to show letters of orders or benefices more than once. No alienations of jewels or other things of the church should be made without consultation and consent of the dean if in England. Everything contrary to this arbitration is annulled.

The king then, being content, asked the dean and proctors and canons if it pleased them, and they returned thanks, and he directed the arbitration to be copied and sealed in triplicate, one part with the seal of the dean for the chapter, another with the seal of the chapter for the dean, and the third with the seals of the dean and chapter for himself in Chancery. Present Sir Robert Wylughby, lord of Wylughby, Masters John Stafford, clerk of the privy seal, Robert Gilbert, dean of the chapel, and William Alnewyk, secretary of the king, Robert Leke, official of Lincoln, John Elvet, archdeacon of Leicester, Sir William Porter, knight, William FitzHenry, usher of the king’s chamber, and Robert Waterton, esquires, and other nobles and gentry in copious multitude. Subsequently on the same day in their chapter-house the dean and canons, Sirs John Percy and Robert Trays excepted, sat in chapter, and the dean approved the award and Master John Marschall approved it as proctor of the chapter in the presence of Master Robert Leke, doctor of laws, and Master John de Depyngh, bachelor in laws, notary; and Robert at Kirk of Southscarle, clerk of the diocese of York, and Master Andrew Sutton, clerk of the city of Loudon, notaries, drew up the instrument on two pieces of parchment sewn together with white thread, adding their marks and noting certain interlineations. Richard, bishop of Lincoln, caused his seal to be affixed in his inn at the Old Temple, London, on 27 May, 1421.
