of Warwick and Albemarle, to guard the king's person, and educate him in good manners, letters, languages, nurture and wit, during the pleasure of the king and council. [Pocula]

By p.s.

Licence, by advice of the council, for Robert Chichele, citizen and grocer of London, or for his assigns after his death, to give in mortmain to Thomas Southwell, clerk, now parson of St. Stephen's, Wallbrooke, in the city of London, and his successors, a plot of ground containing 208½ feet in length and 66 feet in breadth, in the same parish, which is held of the king in burgage, and which was found by inquisition before Henry Barton, mayor and escheator in London, to be of the yearly value of 13s. 4d. to the end that the parishioners may build a new church thereon, in honour of St. Stephen, a cemetery for the burial of the dead, and certain houses for the dwelling of the parson. The abbot and convent of St. John's, Colchester, are to be patrons of this new church, as they are of the present church, which is so small that the parishioners and others who resort thither to hear divine service and pour forth their devotions cannot attend or wait for long without great weariness; but there is no suitable space adjoining the present church to enable it to be enlarged or a churchyard made there.

By p.s. and for 5 marks paid in the hanaper.
