Commission to William Walysby, king’s clerk, setting forth that whereas it was found before Master John Kyngeton, clerk, one of the commissaries of Henry IV appointed to visit the free chapel of Hastynge, that the rents and emoluments then belonging to the chapel in common, together with the yearly offerings of the faithful, would barely suffice to maintain the chapel with its vestments, books and other ornaments, and the houses newly built within Hastynge castle for the habitation of the vicars and chaplains and to supply lights for the chapel, but not to pay the stipends of the vicar, chaplains, clerks and ministers there, and that the said John, therefore, ordained that the canons prebendary having certain prebends in the same, when not resident, should pay moderate and reasonable yearly pensions for the maintenance of the vicars, chaplains, clerks and ministers out of their prebends, and afterwards Henry Romworth, dean, and the chapter of the chapel, submitted to such ordinance, and bound themselves and their successors to observe it, as appears by letters under their common seal and by letters of Henry IV exemplifying the said ordinance, but now it is understood that certain prebendaries are refusing to pay the pensions due from them under the said ordinance, the king has appointed him, being now dean of the chapel, to ascertain who such prebendaries are and to sequestre their prebends until they pay.
