Exemplification of a writing of Thomas, abbot of the monastery of St. Mary, Coggeshale, and the convent of that place, dated in their chapter house, 27 February, 1446-7, deputing John Fissher the elder, John Fissher the elder (sic), Henry Roys, John Bray, their fellow-monk and scholar of that monastery, Thomas Damet, their fellow-monk, and Paschal Gylot, sometime abbot of the monastery of St. Mary Graces by the Tower of London, as their attorneys and surveyors, wardens and receivers of all the goods, rents and profits pertaining to the monastery, with full powers herein.

March 4.

Grant to Thomas Tudenham, knight, keeper of the great wardrobe, which office was granted to him of late by letters patent, of free disposition and such liberty in the wardrobe, that the treasurer of England or other lord, estate or person shall not be entertained there nor have any interest therein during his term of office, except those who are there at the king's fee and are bound by letters patent and ought to attend daily on the said office, and that no mayor, alderman, sheriff, constable, herald or other person enter the said place, its dwellings, rents or tenements to make any arrest or execution, unless the keeper, his deputy or the collector of the said rent be then present; because the keeper accounts yearly touching the wardrobe with all its dwellings and tenements, receipts, repairs and other necessary costs, with the wages of all workmen there; and the tailors and skinners have been hindered by such as have been entertained there, because the doors have often been closed, and they could not come to their works.
