Pardon to William Horne of Daventree, co. Northampton, 'gentilman,' of the king's suit and any consequent outlawry for the felony whereof he was indicted on Thursday after Whitsuntide, 26 Henry VI, before Richard Wylloughby, coroner in the county, on view of the body of Henry Elyot alias James of Daventree, 'weaver,' to wit, of having gone from Daventree on Whitsunday before the said Thursday about the fifth hour after noon to a common pasture at Daventree called 'Welton Way' and there found some cows of Henry pasturing, which he would have then driven away to Daventree to imponde the same, but Henry forbade him, whereupon William at the fifth hour wounded him on the left side of the head to the brain with a 'turvespade' worth 2d., for which the township of Daventree will answer, of which blow Henry lay sick until the said Thursday and then died at Daventre. By p.s. etc.
