to find any night-watches of themselves on the city walls for the keeping of the city, since it is their duty only to pray for the good estate of the king and the realm day and night, nor, save in great necessity, to wear arms: grant also to the same of free entrance and exit through and into the city by any parts thereof to the said church and other their places with coaches, waggons, carts, horses laden or unladen and other their carriages, as often as need be: grant also to the same of a tun of red wine yearly in the port of Newcastle upon Tyne for sacred uses in the said church; and any defect herein shall be amended by the chancellor at the suit of the prior and canons without fine or fee.

Whereas 6l. 6s. 4d. were due of late to John Stodley, merchant, deducted from the wages of divers folk for the payment of Roger Salvayn, then treasurer of Calais, and 16l. 15s. 5d. were due of late to Nicholas Gayte for moneys deducted from the wages of Thomas Swynford, lieutenant of the duke of Exeter, then captain of the castle of Calais, and 7l. 3s. 4d. were due of late to John Symond, merchant, for moneys deducted from the wages of divers folk for the payment of the said treasurer, and 37l. 4s. 2d. were due of late to Thomas Fairday for moneys deducted in like manner, and 49l. 6s. were due of late to William Ledemham for moneys deducted from the wages of John Gerard, then captain of the tower on Calais harbour, and 23l. 7s. 11d. were due of late to Peter Johanson, 'mason,' of his wages, as appears in the said treasurer's account finishing on 4 February, 8 Henry V: and whereas 79l. 16s. 11½d. were due of late to Ingilram Fosse for his fee until 13 August, 13 Henry VI, as appears in the account of Richard Bokelond, then treasurer of Calais, finishing on 10 February, 14 Henry VI: in all which sums though the said creditors were indebted to William Sibbeson for wares and victuals bought from him by them and delivered to him bills of debenture of the said treasurers specifying the sums, he or they have obtained no payment thereof: the king, because William, with their assent, has surrendered the bills into the Exchequer, has granted to him, in payment of the said sum of 220l. 6d. 50d. yearly from the customs and subsidies on wools, hides and woolfells issuing without the port of London, and 60l. 3d. yearly from the customs and subsidies in the port of Sandwich, until the sum be fully paid.
