Whereas Adam de Lymburgh, late canon of St. Mary’s, Lincoln, deceased, acquired in fee a croft in Great Lymburgh from Henry de Beaumys, tenant in chief, and entered thereon without licence, and it was therefore taken into the late king’s hands and the custody for a certain yearly farm was by the king granted to Roger Kelk, clerk, who demised it to John Henrison at the same yearly farm payable to the king, and afterwards Beatrice the daughter of Robert Cook of Lymburgh, brother of Adam, and his kinswoman and heir, released the same to the said John, in fee, without licence; the king now, for half a mark paid to him by the said John, pardons these trepassers and confirms the premises to him in fee by the same services.
