ancestor and the then abbot; furthermore the abbot and convent have granted to him and his heirs that within the said free chase they will not hereafter construct houses more than 100 feet from those now built, though they may enlarge and repair the latter, and will only have in their lodges of Doringhoue in Foulsechagh, Elsonghouses, Morehousenghouse of Beuerlay, Calsalhouse and Burethwaty such resident farmers thereof as are their own shepherds for keeping their stock in winter and mowing their hay in summer, and in Calstane[s]dhouse their own shepherds throughout the year for keeping their horses and other stock, and that all their shepherds and lodge-keepers shall take an oath before the said John's chief forester, when required, that they will not forfeit deer or fowl or aught else belonging to the chase, and that they will have only their own forge of Dacre and one other within the same, for making their iron where they please with power to burn coal from any kind of wood within the same, but not to sell the coal and only to burn wood for making ash between Michaelmas and Easter every year. The said John confirms to them in frank almoin all their granges, buildings, lodges and closes, as well as their lands and tenements, woods and pastures within the said chase of Niderdale, with licence to approve by making enclosures or constructing new buildings. Witnessed by Sir John de Merkinfeld, Sir Robert de Coignere, Sir John de Walkyngham and Sir Richard de Bermyngham, William de Aldefeld, Richard de Schupton, Peter de KIyvngton and others; in confirming the premises John de Moubray the son further grants to them licence to erect buildings and make enclosures within the said chase notwithstanding any grant to the contrary.
